Church split marks victory for Ukraine

Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew I, spiritual leader of 500m Orthodox Christians, kisses Metropolitan Epiphanius, head of a newly formed Ukrainian church that is independent from Russia's patriarchate, at the Church of St George in Istanbul yesterday.

Taking place as Eastern Orthodox Christians celebrated Christmas Eve, the event included the handing over of a decree formally recognising the Ukrainian church's formation. The process has been sharply condemned by Russia.

Attaining religious independence is a victory for Ukraine in its wider struggle against Russia that encompasses Moscow's annexation of Crimea and support for separatists fighting Kiev in the east of the country. Roman Olschak in Kiev

Briefing

► Record sales belie grim outlook for stores
Data showing sliding footfall in stores, slowing rental growth at malls and stuttering demand for consumer electronics have heaped new scrutiny on the sector despite record overall sales. — PAGE 13

► Steel border 'barrier' enough for Trump
The US president has said a steel barrier would satisfy his demand for a wall on the Mexico border, as the government shutdown hinges on the issue faced its third week. — PAGE 2; BANKS RELENT, PAGE 13

► Bolton demands safety for Kurds
White House national security adviser John Bolton has said Turkey must promise not to attack Kurdish forces in north east Syria before US troops pull out from the region. He visits Ankara today. — PAGE 4

► Serbian president challenges opponents
Aleksandar Vucic has dismissed weeks of protests and challenged opponents to demand an election which he says will easily confirm support for him and his party. — PAGE 2
